

Harriet Tubman

Harriet Tubman was born in March of 1822 in Dorchester County, MD and passed away March 10, 1913. Harriet Tubman was a woman who showed strength and courage. Harriet escaped from slavery in the South to become a leading abolitionist before the American war. She led hundreds of enslaved people to freedom in the North along the route of the Underground Railroad. Harriet was a woman who inspired many to be strong, never give up and keep in fighting.

She was someone who also showed the legacy of love, sacrifice, and perseverance. Harriet also had many more accomplishments, she was the first woman to lead an armed assault during the American Civil War, and She also became an African American icon and who is an inspiration for the struggle for equality. Since the African American Civil Rights Movement, her contributions have been acknowledged and set down in school textbooks. Harriet Tubman not only took an active part in the American Civil War, but she also became an amazing speaker for the women's rights to vote. She did all of this not for herself but to show people that by doing good and never giving up can lead you to success.

Overall Harriet Tubman is a hero to all, and she will always be one. She showed us courage, and how much of a role model she can be to people. Tubman did a task that no man or woman could do, she gave people freedom and independence to all the slaves that may have lost hope. Harriet Tubman will always be a hero and a person who showed strength to people and helped give them hope.
